Insights and Needs – Low Fidelity Prototype

Insights: After the first customer check-in we noted a few things that the customer said. Though we didn't have much time because of some technical issues, we captured 3 main things:

1. Disliked the word "disease" being used in the sitemap. We will end up switching it back to the word "Education" which is the same format they have right now.

2. Liked the abundance of imagery on the landing page of the website, and encouraged us to keep it. After consideration we decided that we will add more and format accordingly.

3. Noted that donations should be easily accessible, especially from the landing page which is something that we will consider in our future prototypes.

They also noted small things such as keeping the research part of the website text heavy, since there isn't much imagery she would want to add to it, and putting emphasis on making sure hotlinks and buttons are not misleading and function properly.

Needs: After the customer check-in we will be changing the word disease as a top priority, trying to shift around some imagery on the main landing page and making sure all the buttons are functioning correctly for our next activity deliverables. We also will be purposefully trying a different colour scheme that is on the other side of the colour wheel (literally) to see whether they like the cooler tones of blue more than the orange and yellow they have in order to see what they have to say about that. Instead of just doing the landing pages for the Research / Home Page and Donation Page, we will try to incorporate the entire website itself including all the pages they have but with fixed hotlinks, working buttons, and better visuals.
